South Africa is changing, but apartheid is going to remain an issue!

There is now the real possibility of change in South Africa, but anything could happen. Despite our hopes, it's still far from certain that we'll see a new non-racial democratic country. Even if agreement is reached on the future constitution, the problems will just be starting.

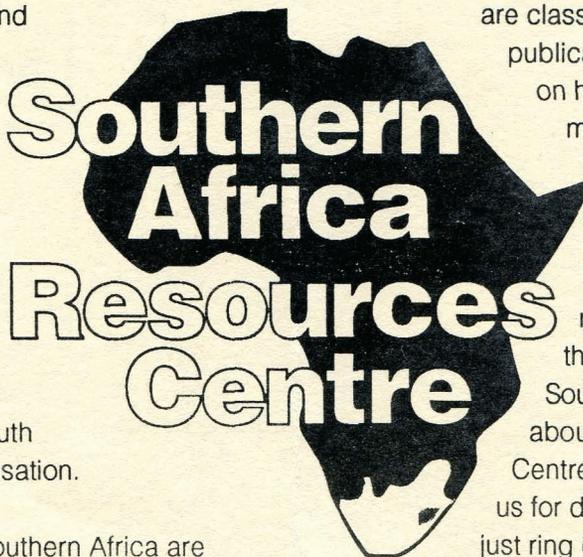

More than 40 years of apartheid have left a terrible legacy for South Africa and the region. A new government will face new problems. How will land and wealth be shared? How can decent housing be provided for the black majority? How can education and health services be opened equally to all? The neighbouring countries face even bigger problems, in reconstructing societies shattered by South African destabilisation.

The issues of Southern Africa are going to be around for some time to come. They will demand our attention. Sheffield's Southern Africa Resources Centre has recently been refurbished and restocked to help those who are concerned or interested in the region. We believe that we have a clear role in stimulating and supporting teaching and learning about Southern Africa. We are also keen to involve more people in our work and hear new ideas on how we can develop.

Situated right in the centre of the city, we offer a wide range of resources on Southern Africa. There are class sets of some publications and advice on how to use materials. Our catalogue offers guidance on items for various age ranges. If you're thinking about Southern Africa, think about the Resources Centre. Please phone us for details of opening - just ring (0742) 739147 at any time.
