

Should people in this country become involved in issues which don't affect Britain directly?

'There's enough problems in our own country. We should deal with them first.'

'It's none of our business what goes on abroad. Other countries can do what they like.'

'It's really difficult to get involved in another country's affairs – we never know enough about what's going on, because we don't live there.'

'We shouldn't try to solve problems in other parts of the world because it's too expensive.'

'It's up to people to solve their own problems – why should we get involved?'
